The fact that her husband is in jail will serve to keep her here. She can furnish a bond of $1,000, and I ask the Court to fix ball at that amount."

Judge Chatfield fixed her ball at $1,500. Inasmuch as O'Connor expressed his willingness to go to jail no ball was fixed in his case. Mr. Miller said he thought he could raise a $1,500 bond for the woman.

O'Connor says he is a broker, and declares the business he and his wife have engaged in is perfectly legitimate. Until last November they conducted a business, which has been called a "get-rich-quick scheme" by the police, at No. $2 Wall street. O'Connor at that time had a fight with "Big Bill" Hennig.

Walter S. Mayer, Chief Post-Office Inspector, with Inspector Kincaid began looking into the business of O'Connor and the woman.
